Your journey to the professional world begins with your student life. It is at this time you start building a name or a brand for yourself. The effective student bio will help you achieve just that, so you have to know what it takes to make a great student bio that will impress your readers, professors, and other people. In this guide, learn how to make a student biography, see some professional bio examples and make your bio stand out by differentiating yourself. Why Bio for Student Is Important Student bio samples give you quick and easy ideas on how to come up with an impressive bio. The biography is important for students because it gives readers a quick glimpse of your personality, achievements, and accomplishments. It also provides them with the chance of knowing you and your story. The bio is an interesting piece that makes them learn about your life aspirations, talents, and skills, too. It also helps you stand out and make a name for yourself. Writing student biography may also help you land a job internship, a volunteer work or a part-time role. Experts, such as a professional bio writer also reveals that students must develop a strong bio as early as their college career, and then keep refining it based on your changing or fixed goals. How to Start a Biography of Student Those reasons and more are why you need to create a student bio, which must be concise and complete to hook the readers' attention. It is important that you combine facts and good writing skills to highlight your academic and professional background. Start with your full name to introduce yourself. The bio for high school or college goes beyond the resume because it illustrates the person that you are, along with your history and education as well as ways you relate to your chosen field or industry. Do more than self-introduction with a friendly, full of personality tone in your bio. This is one of the ways on how to write a professional biography for a college student or university. It goes beyond the CV or resume because the bio can also be handed throughout promotional materials and networking opportunities. How to Write an Original Bio for Student The bio must be updated once a year, or every time you achieved something significant. Its length should be about 200 words. For ways on how to write based on a good short student bio example, see the following. Tone. It can be formal or informal. Use the third person throughout the bio, but again, start with your first name if for a high school bio. On the other hand, the professional bio should be more formal in tone, and use of your last name and the correct pronoun must be used. Content Format Start with your first and last name, school year, and your location. Write the school name where you graduated and highlight any awards or honors received. First, focus on the academics going to the co-curricular and accomplishments/interests. Don't forget to talk about your future plans or career goals. Common Mistakes of Student's Bio Get Expert Student Bio Writing How to write a student bio about yourself? Student bio writing requires careful planning. Style Guide for Student Bios Note - A bio should be updated at least once a year or after any significant achievement. Length 150-200 words. Tone Student Bios can be informal. Use your first name or appropriate pronoun throughout the bio. Professional bios after graduation are normally more formal in tone and your last name or appropriate pronoun should be used. Content Present a well-rounded picture of yourself both as a student and individual. Avoid long explanations or specific details on any one event or accomplishment. Avoid the use of descriptive adjectives or adverbs. Just the facts, please. Keep a public audience in mind when deciding on content and tone. Format Begin with your first and last name, class year, and where you are from. Mention where you graduated from high school and any specific honors or awards from that time. High school accomplishments become less relevant for juniors and seniors. Transition to your Dartmouth experiences by the second or third sentence. Focus first on academics and then co-curricular and interests/accomplishments. Conclude with career interests and/or future plans. Sample Bio of a First-Year or Sophomore Jill Baldwin '18 comes from Lexington, Kentucky and graduated from Westview High School as an AP Scholar with Distinction. At Westview, Jill was the captain of the debate team and earned several awards in regional speech competitions. She also participated in the Leadership Institute, National Honors Society, and Student Government. At Dartmouth, Jill plans to pursue a major in Chemistry with a minor in public policy. She is a member of the Dartmouth Varsity Equestrian Team and works as a volunteer instructor at the High Horses Therapeutic Riding Program in Norwich, VT. After graduation, Jill plans to attend medical school and pursue a career in public health education. Sample Bio of a Junior or Senior Alisdair Brodie '15 grew up in in Scotland and graduated from the International School of Aberdeen. At Dartmouth, Alisdair is a double History and Economics major. He is currently an executive editor for the Dartmouth Law Journal, a member of Dartmouth Roots, and has worked as a photographer since his freshman year for the Rockefeller Center. Alisdair is on the varsity soccer team and is active in the Dartmouth Outing Club as an Outing Club Freshman Orientation Trip leader. He has worked several terms as a researcher for the Rockefeller Center's Policy Research Shop and has held internships on Capitol Hill and with a New York law firm. After graduation, Alisdair plans to spend the summer traveling in Europe before entering Harvard Law School in the fall. How to Write a Professional Bio as a College Student. A well-written bio is a great tool to have in your professional toolkit. Whether for a job application, networking event, or as an introduction for future employers, your bio is a great way to share who you are and highlight your accomplishments. It can also be a great addition to your LinkedIn profile's "Summary" section. Depending on your year in college, your bio should craft an engaging narrative that emphasizes your interests and personality. Format Bios are written in the third person and are typically one or two paragraphs, depending on your level of experience. Your bio should start with your name and a quick sentence that describes your basic background. This can include your college, year in school, academic focus, and professional interest. Your bio should be brief, concise, and clear. Establish a Background Story Highlighting your background will give the reader an opportunity to gain a deeper understanding of your personal narrative, which may not be evident on your resume. Also, consider including recent events, such as studying abroad or volunteering. Find a couple of moments in your life that have impacted your identity or interests, and briefly, mention them. This will personalize your bio and help you stand out from your peers. Explain Your Interests Next, you will want to elaborate on your interests. For students with a significant amount of professional experience, this will focus more on career goals. If you don't feel you have enough job experience to write about or are not sure about your professional goals, describe your academic or extracurricular interests. Feel free to add any hobbies that highlight your uniqueness, such as painting, running marathons, or cooking. Remember, your personal biography is an area to describe your personality that is not as easily communicated on your resume. Emphasize How You Can Add Value Lastly, you want to end on a high note by emphasizing how you can add value. Depending on where you use this bio, this sentence or two can refer to adding value to a company, team, or event. Highlight your unique talents and skills that would interest your audience. Rather than explicitly stating, "I can add value by....," share this message subtly. You want your reader to understand that you are a well-rounded individual and professional who can contribute significant knowledge and experience. There is no order to include all of this information. Play with the format and see what works best for your narrative. Although it can be difficult to summarize your life in one paragraph, this is a useful tool for crafting a positive image of yourself for potential professional networks. Below are two examples: Example 1 (for first-years and sophomores): Alison Johnson is finishing her first year at DePaul University where she is interested in business. Although she has yet to declare a major, she's considering finance or marketing. After watching her parents run a restaurant for years, she knew at a very young age that she also wanted to go into business. In high school, Alison waited tables at the family restaurant during the summer and was fascinated by the many working parts it takes to operate a successful business. From this experience, she learned the value of hard work, efficiency, and communication. In the future, she hopes to continue her parents' legacy and run her own five-star restaurant in downtown Chicago. Alison spends her spare time singing in her church choir and cooking for friends and family. Example 2 (for juniors and seniors): Jared Smith is a senior at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign where he is majoring in International Studies with a concentration in Latin America. His interest in international development began during the fall semester of 2012 when he had the opportunity to study abroad in Peru. He learned about the inequalities affecting indigenous communities, experienced the Peruvian culture, and became proficient in Spanish. Inspired by this international experience, Jared interned with the Chicago Council on Global Affairs, conducting research on food security in Latin America. Jared aspires to pursue a career in international development and write policy for a government agency. When he is not busy reading about current affairs in Latin America, he enjoys playing intramural basketball and training for the Chicago marathon.
